

Q Suppose I should choose to throw in my lot with the select few who make a pretense of using their own minds rather than fear the masses who do not—the masses of whom you claim 98 percent?

A If you have courage enough to do this, you will crimp my style.

A chill ran down my spine when I first read this . . . since circumstances did indeed prevent this manuscript, written in 1938, from being published until now, well after Hill's death in 1970. Was the delayed publication of the work truly caused by his wife's "fear of criticism" and concern over the reaction of religious leaders and public school advocates . . . or was it due to the work of the Devil himself? And now, the family and the Foundation have decided it is time to share the manuscript with the world. Shall we heed Hill's wisdom, discover our "other selves," and take control of our own minds, reclaiming our destiny?

Q Why do you lay claim to no scientist? Don't you like scientists?

A Oh yes, I like all people well enough, but true scientists are out of my reach.

Q Why?

A Because they think for themselves and spend their time studying natural laws. They deal with cause and effect. They
