

Q IF THIS CONFESSION OF YOURS STOPPED right here your statement would be sound, but fortunately for millions of your victims who will gain their release because of your confession, this interview will continue until you have supplied me with the weapon by which you will eventually be restrained from domination of people through their fears and superstitions. Remember, Your Majesty, your confession has just begun. After I wring from you a description of the methods by which you control people, I will force you also to give the formula by which your control can be broken at will.

It is true I shall not remain here long enough to defeat you, but the published word I leave behind me will be deathless because it will consist of truth! You fear the opposition of no individual because you know it will be short, but you do fear truth. You fear truth and nothing else, for the reason it is slowly but definitely giving human beings freedom from all manner of fear. Without the weapon of fear you would be helpless and entirely unable to control any human being! Is that true or false?

“It is true I shall not remain here long enough to defeat you, but the published word I leave behind me will be deathless because it will consist of truth!”

Indeed, Napoleon Hill passed away in 1970, and this work being published in 2011 becomes deathless.

A I have no alternative but to admit that what you say is true.
